CHARACTER, A LIABILITY

What Its Possession Places On Individual in Duty To Others.

A VERY INTERESTING AND HELPFUL ADDRESS BY MR. HALL BEFORE THE SUNDAY CLUB IN THE Y. M. C. A. ROOMS.

A fair sized crowd attended the meeting of the Sunday Club at the Y. M. C. A. building Sunday afternoon, and those who attended were well rewarded by a most pleasing musical program and a splendid talk by Rev. Chas. P. Hall.

Mr. Hall chose as his subject "Character, a Liability." Others, said the speaker, had addressed the club on character as an asset and its relation to life, and he wanted to show that each and every man owes it to the community in which he lives and to other forces and associations, to keep a good character.

This liability, or obligation, must be paid, and is one of the chief debts that men owe. If one's ancestors lived unblemished and undirtied lives, and an excellent character has been given to a boy by his parents and ancestry, it is a duty he owes to his ancestry to keep his character in the pure, sweet, and wholesome condition that it was when given to him.

Not only does he owe this respect for character to his parentage, but to the men and women who make up the community in which he lives. Every man, said Mr. Hall, influences those surrounding him. No one passes through the world without his shadow affecting those who come under it. And so, each man owes it to his neighbor—even to the unknown neighbor, who passes him in the street—to all mankind, that his shadow or his influence shall be for good upon the earth; that he shall live so that those that are his equal in character will not be contaminated, and that those who are weaker, and may have fallen into the lower paths of life, shall be bettered by having come in contact with him.

This debt is one that every man should bear well in mind, said the speaker. In business, a liability is an obligation that must be met. Clean character is a moral obligation that must be paid to those whom it is due, and they are self parentage, and all mankind.

The speaker also cited instances wherein the personality of a man influences the surrounding persons. He pointed out the moral standards upon which sets and societies of life are based, and the influences of the people who make up those sets and societies, and that is a moral obligation that man takes upon himself at birth to better the society in which he may be placed by his parentage or environment.

This great tonic and alternative medicine invigorates the system, purifies the blood and is especially helpful in all forms of female weakness. 50c at all druggists.

AMUSEMENTS

A SCENE FROM "THE CONTENTED WOMAN."

"Brewster's Millions" Last Night. "Brewster's Millions," a production of exceptional merit, dramatized from George Barr McCutcheon's famous novel by Winchell Smith and Byron Oring, pleased a large audience at the opera house last night. The play is billed as a comedy, and it is, without a shadow of a doubt, clean, sparkling and up-to-date. However, in one or two acts, particularly the third, there is a strong vein of sentiment, which lends to it an air of the melodrama. As a scenic production, it is par excellence. In the third act is depicted the deck of the steam yacht "Flitter" at anchor. Eventually the order is given "get under sail," the anchor is hoisted and the ship slowly steams out of the harbor, headed seaward. The shore with its lighted buildings, slowly recedes, the waves run higher, thunder is heard, lightning flashes and the yacht is sailing at full speed on the mighty deep, in the face of a bad storm. So faithfully is this scene carried out that one can almost feel the sensation of being aboard a storm-tossed ship. The rudder of the "Flitter" retires to work, and the ship is helpless. All preparations are made for signalling a passing liner—the emergency gun is fired, the distress signal run up, the engines reversed, and slowly the yacht comes to a dead stop, just as the liner, fully lighted, appears and the curtain falls. The scene is realistic in the extreme, and was fully appreciated by those present.

The cast is an exceptionally large one and far above the average. To praise any particular member more than another would be an injustice. All are very fine. However, particular mention must be given the following, as their work, difficult in the extreme, shone out for the fact that they had most to do: Robert Ober as "Monty" Brewster, was very clever. Mr. Ober is a light comedian of ability, who looks well and acts better. He does not overdo his part and is natural from first to last. June Mathis as "Peggy," was very sweet. She is very young in appearance and wholly girlish. Her emotional work was commendable. As "Mrs. Dan," Miss Nettie Black was decidedly good, to say nothing of her being versatile. As a character, "good fellow" or motherly friend, she was perfect.

Each and every member of the cast did much to make the evening an enjoyable one, and while it is true they did not prevent "Monty" from spending his million, they did prevent the audience from spending a dull night.

Tomorrow Night—Hoyt's "A Contented Woman."

Of Hoyt's "A Contented Woman," with the company that will present it here tomorrow night, the Norfolk (Va.) Virginian-Pilot says:

"If you want to laugh until your sides ache; if you want to be really amused, you should not fail to see 'A Contented Woman' at the Granby theatre this week. It is safe to say without stretching a point in the least that the show is the best seen at the Granby this season, and better, yes far better, than some who were obliged to pay fancy prices to witness."

There is more fun, more wholesome laughs, and funny climaxes in "A Contented Woman" than can be found in half of the alleged minstrel shows combined.

Henrietta Lee, as Grace Holmes, plays the title role, and she is simply great. She acts the part as if she was made for it, and few women on the stage have that rare achievement.

Charles P. Morrison, well we all know him, he plays the part of Cutting Hintz, a bachelor club man. If there is a better comedian of the kind and cut of Morrison he has not been this week. Morrison is one of those comedians that says funny things when you least expect them and you must laugh. Randolph Currie as Benton Holmes, who is the opposition candidate against his wife on a reform ticket, is strong, and plays his part to perfection.

Helen E. Davidge, as Aunt Jim, an earnest advocate of woman's suffrage, is a screamer. She is the most mannish woman seen on the stage in Norfolk. Herbert Heywood plays Uncle Tobie, and is married to Aunt Jim. Well, the show could not get along without Tobie, and Heywood delivers the goods. Specialties by Mlle. Mayo, Edith Carlisle, Thompson Sisters, Charles P. Morrison and Emmet O'Connor are alone worth the price of admission. The Thompson sisters could make some of the top-notchers in vaudeville look amateurish when it comes to dancing. And Edith Carlisle can sing some. Mlle. Mayo simply could not respond to all the encores last night. Her toe, dancing is different and better than the average."
